

We# We Rate Dogs

Of course we do!

The Twitter account WeRateDogs (@dog_rates) is extremely popular (8.9 million followers at the time of rating). Their ratings are on a scale of *More Than 10* over 10, or humorous mistaken identity gags that classify dogs as not dogs.

The most prevalent dog reviewed is the golden retriever, which an AI identified in 266 images from the account, followed closely by Labrador retrievers and on down from there, with the Bouvier des Flandres bringing up the rear with 2 appearances.

Various types of dogs are referred to as doggos, puppies, puppos, or floofers, or a combination thereof.

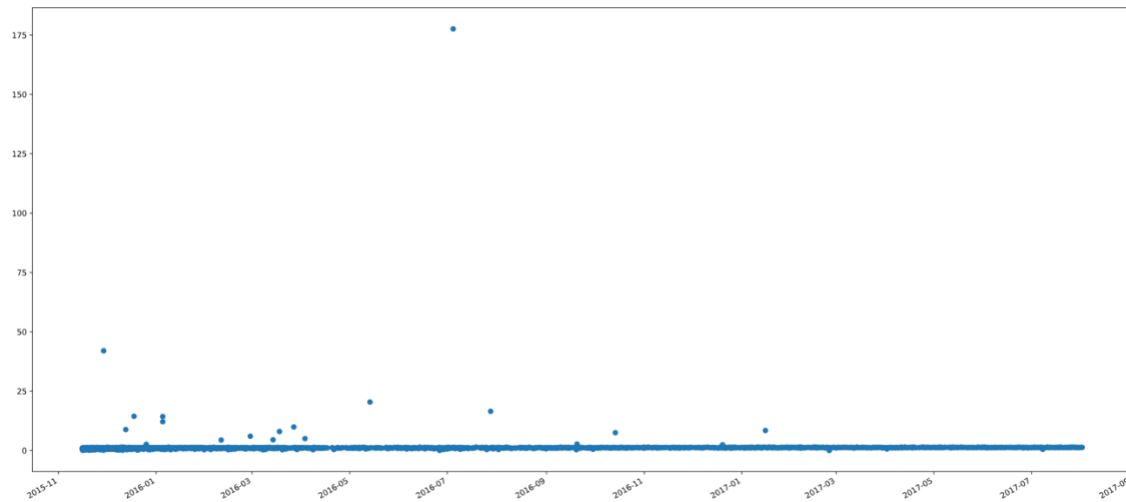

Floofers get the longest tweet text on average, at over 115 characters. Doggos get the least on average, at just over 104 characters.

There are some hilarious “definitely not dogs” ratings. The AI identified the top 5 as such:

Seat Belt	45.0
Teddy	41.0
Web Site	16.0
Tennis Ball	16.0
Dingo	27.0

Although dingo is pretty close to a dog, ever seen a Red Australian Cattle Dog? Pretty much a dingo.

The ratings are also quite ridiculous:

The highest rating is 1776 out of 10, here are some other fun stats about the ratings:

```
count  1987.000000 mean    12.280825
std     41.570741
min      0.000000

50%     11.000000
75%     12.000000

```

After January of 2017, the authors appear to have calmed down and no longer issue ratings higher than about 13/10.
